Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg (1933–2020) was born Joan Ruth Bader in a working-class neighborhood in Brooklyn, New York. She earned her bachelor's degree at Cornell University and married Martin D. Ginsburg. She became a mother before starting law school, first at Harvard and then at Columbia, graduating co-first in her class. President Carter appointed her to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit in 1983, where she served until her appointment to the Supreme Court in 1993. Later in her tenure, she became more forceful with her opinions. Her dissent in Leiberman v. Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co. was credited with inspiring the 2009 Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, making it easier for employees to win pay discrimination claims. Ginsburg spent much of her career as an advocate for gender equality and women's rights. She made clear that the Constitution did not require ignoring differences between men and women, but that any differential treatment, must not "create or perpetuate the legal, social, and economic inferiority of women."

Ginsburg's judicial dissents received attention in American popular culture, which earned her the moniker "The Notorious R.B.G." Her trademark of wearing feminine lace collars over her robes enhanced this persona—which became more elaborate and symbolic over the years. A yellow jabot marked her approval, while her famous dissent collar (which she wore the day after the 2016 election) was black and spiked with rhinestones. In 2019 she debuted a collar that combined Belgian-style lace with the word "Tzedek" woven in Hebrew, signifying the Jewish tenet of "Tzedek, tzedek tirdor" ("Justice, justice you shall pursue"). Despite her heroic efforts to hold on through terminal cancer, she died before a progressive President could appoint her successor. R.B.G.'s death in this tumultuous year may unravel the progress made during her tenure. Illustrated by Chandler O'Leary and printed by Jessica Spring, as we attempt to rekindle the fragile safety net that supports our democracy—and which now hangs by a thread. 220 copies were printed by hand at Springdale Press in Tacoma, October 2020
